The freedom I enjoy most is landing in a random place while I'm away from the ground, observing what's going on down there. Sometimes I feel as if that place belongs to me. But loneliness hurts a little. What I really need is a companion I can communicate telepathically — at least that's something I can do in that moment.

Hooray, someone's with me at last! Let's chat and see what develops between us.

RAGNAROK is coming

This vivid memory transports me back to those golden days of youth. When I was sixteen or seventeen, I would wander the city streets with my Walkman, completely immersed in the raw power of Metallica's albums.

In today's digital age, the Walkman has faded into obsolescence, yet it retains a profound sentimental value in our collective memory—a tangible relic of a simpler time that shaped our musical journey.

This book, which I designed manually, can be considered a collection of photos. You will find different layouts on some of the pages—a choice I felt was the most accurate for this form.

After completing this book, I realized how many things inspired me. I gathered this inspiration in the design, the text, the photo selection for the pages, and more. I truly enjoyed the process of creating this book, and that enjoyment will likely lead me to new creations.
